Coach Jack Lengyel uses rhetorical devices ~~in his to create~~ invigorating and powerful speech to his team which creates a strong sense of pathos ~~.to the team's~~ pathos, which enables him to give ~~an invigorating and powerful speech~~. His use of anaphora emphasizes the players' shared history and terrible loss. At the grave, Lengyel reminds the team that "this is [their] past... this is where [they] have been. This is how [they] got here. This is who [they] are" to emphasize the players' shared history and communal identity good point! with the victims of the crash. His emphasis on their shared history allows him to make ~~this an~~ appeal to the team's ~~emotions~~ pathos by evoking feelings of unity, perseverance and belonging. He further uses anaphora, "Six players, six teammates, six Sons of Marshal", to highlight the team's tragic loss and the dimensions of its effects on the players and their community. Lengyel's speech culminates, with another use of anaphora, in a dramatic moment of catharsis, "We are... Marshall! We are... Marshall! We are... Marshall", that conclusively unites and strengthens the team. well stated

Lengyel's ~~speech is quite honest at the same time; he acknowledges that the other team on paper is much better; (do you see how I proved a context before stating the point about antithesis?)~~; he uses antithesis to emphasize that even though the opposing team is better, "they don't know [the team's] heart. [Lengyel] do[es]". He reassures the team of their capacity and gives them much-needed hope to address ~~this~~ their anxiety. His use of asyndeton illustrates that, only by playing "from the soles of [their] feet, with every ounce of blood [they]'ve got in [their] body, [and] lay[ing] it [all] on the line...", can the hesitant team "rise from these ashes and grab glory". Lengyel ~~makes an appeal to the players' pathos by inspiring~~ (be direct) them to have agency over their destinies. Lengyel's use of rhetorical devices resonates with the team and appeals to their pathos, enabling him to deliver an evocative and galvanizing speech.

Don't worry about stating the device; that should come after you develop the ideas and show how the devices strengthen those ideas! $85\% + 78\% = 82\%$
